Google Glass i en klinisk praksis

- Giver god mening "håndfri" anvendelse
- Opsamling af klinisk billed-dokumentation
- Overførsel af billeder til Columna CIS
- Understøttelse af opkald til specialist / konsultation ved kollega i realtid

Status på projektet

- Projekt har stået stille i år
- Meget medieomtale både lokalt og nationalt; Natholdet og Dybvaaaad
- Udfordringer:
 - Adgang på regionsnetværk
 - Kun et par "Glass"
 - Patientkontekst
- Nyt speciale

The image is a screenshot of a news article from the Danish website Computerworld. The article is titled "Google på vej med ny type Google Glass - sådan bliver de nye briller" (Google on the way with a new type of Google Glass - this is how the new glasses will be). The article text states that Google Glass has had a rough start, but according to several media reports, Google is now on the way with a new version of the glasses. This time, there is a very clear purpose for the glasses. The article is dated July 10, 2015, at 14:48. The author is Morten Sahl Madsen, a test and user editor. The article mentions that Google Glass was the most hyped tech story of 2013 but has since disappeared from the hype cycle. At the bottom of the article, there is a green banner for "Surftown" with the text "BESTIL FØR 19/10/2015".

Google Glass was the poster boy of the smartglasses industry, but the Big G decided to call time on its augmented reality specs for the masses... for now at least.

But that doesn't mean that the AR headset revolution has come to a halt - after all, smartglasses are set to trump smartphones in terms of users within 10 years. AugmentedReality.org claims that shipments of smartglasses will hit 1
